LINES ON A SKELETON.

This poem appeared in the London Morning Chronicle, just forty years ago. A reward of fifty guineas failed to bring it to authorship, nor is it yet known.

Behold this ruin! 'twas a skull,
Once of ethereal spirit full.
This narrow cell was life's retreat,
What beauteous visions filled this spot.
What dreams of pleasure long forgot,
Nor Hope, nor Love, nor Joy, nor Fear.
Have left one trace of record here.

Beneath this musing empy
Once shone the bright and busy eye;
But start not at the dismal void—
It would love that eye employed,
If with no woeless fire it gleamed,
But through the dews of kindness dreamt,
That eye shall forever bright
When stars and sun are sunk in Night.

Within this hollow cavern hung
The ready, swift, and tempestuous tongue.
If falsehood's honey'd bait delisted,
And where it could not prude was chained;
Behold in virtue's cause it spoke,
Yet gentle Concord never broke;

This silent Tongue shall plead for thee
When Time invades Eternity.

Say, did these fingers delve the mine?
Or with its envied rubies shine?

To how the rock or wave the gun
Can little now avail to them,

But if the page of truth they sought,
Or confit to the mourner brought,

These hands a plebeian herd shall claim

Than all that waits on Wealth or Fame.

Aval! whether bare or shod
There lies the path of duty trod.

To seek Affliction's humble shed;

If Honour's guilty bribe they spurned,

And home to Virtue's cot returned.

These feet with angel's wings shall vie,

And tread the palace of the sky.

TO JOHN C. FREMONT.

The error, Fremont, simply was to act

A平原's part, without the statesman's tact,

To make a bold counsel but of common sense;

To make it come as well as consequence;

To take no courage! God has spoken through thee,

Irreversibly, the mighty word Be Free!

The hand shake with them and the slave's dull ear

Tours from the rice-field steadily to hear,

Who could recall them now must first arrest

The winds that blow down from the free Northwest.

Hastening the Gulf; or like a scroll, roll back

The Mississippi to its upper spring!

Such words fulfill their prophecy, and lack

But the full time to burden into things;

LINCOLN'S LAST STORY.

Old Major Downing, it is known, is quartered in the White House, and has written some letters descriptive of the doings there. The following is supposed to be the last notable scene in that house of mourning, and was obtained through an intimate friend of the Major:

We have had an awful solemn time here since the elections in Ohio, Indiana and Pennsylvania, and Towny, Old Abe and Stanton and Welles takes it to heart very much, and it was more than a week after the news began to come in before the President could tell a story.

To day he roused up enough to tell us one: He said the election reminded him of a log spekulator in Illinois, who wanted to buy all the logs he could, and to "control the market." He got all the shinglers in two or three banks, and opened up an office in Chicago to invite sellers. One day an old teller came in, a tidy plump lookin' old feller, and wanted to sell sum' bugs."

"How many hav ye got?" sez the spekulator.

"I don't know exactly sez the old hog draver.

"Wal," sez the spekulator, "guess I'll take all you can bring any how," and the feller was nixed—it was a good figger.

"Now," sez the old feller, "lets give me a paper saying what you'll do, and put in it that I may deliver them bugs at Chicago or Alton, or Springfield, just as I please."

"Of course," says the spekulator, and he wrote the paper.

The old fellow went away, and in a few days his live pork began to come in.

The clerk come in one day, and sez to the spekulator, "Old Benson," sez he, "the old feller's name was Benson" has sent in 10,000 hogs. An' here is a letter from Springfield; he has sent in 15,000 there, and the agent at Alton say he has sent in 20,000 there, and the money has been a most run out, and he writes for more."

"Very well," sez the spekulator, "I guess shall finish the old fellow's lot."

But he was mistaken. Every mornin' more tones—mooes driven in—more money wanted.

At last the spekulator began to be sheared, and sent for old Benson, who you may be sure, wasn't far away.

"Well, old feller," sez he, "you hav a good many bugs."

"Right smart lot on 'em," sez the old chap,

I'll send in ten thousand more tomorrow."

"Thunder and blazes!" sez the spekulator, "how many on earth hav you?"

"Don't know," sez old Benson, "I havn't a big lot to come yet."

"See here, old feller," sez the spekulator,

"I guess you'd better quit deliverin'; jest keep the money you've got, and take all the hogs I hav," and let me out of that contract!"—for he found out who old Benson was, and begin to hav' a notion of the size of his game.

After some disputin' the spekulator made over to Benson, and shut up his office and went to settle with the banks.

"Now," sez old Abe to Stanton, "you kin make the application yourself—and may be you'd better be gettin', ready to hand over things to these Democrats—for they don't seem to be deliverin' yet. I'm afraid, Stanton, we can't control the market."

THE QUESTION OF LABOR AND EMIGRATION.

There is a great and rapidly increasing interest felt in the question how labor shall be obtained for all the pressing wants of the country present and prospective. The supply is everywhere short to a degree that threatens to affect many classes of business very seriously; and certainly for some five or six months to come there is little prospect that men in the army and navy will return to their former pursuits. And until there is some great result attained in the war, everything crowds and drives irresistibly into the public service. Men are wanted in every subordinate branch of public employment, as well as in the army proper. They are wanted in iron foundries, in the manufacture of ships of war, in private armories and ordnance works, and in a thousand other urgent requirements hardly less pressing than the draft into the army itself. vast numbers have been, and are constantly being supplied, but the waste is too great to give encouragement to the belief that any great surplus can ever return to other employments. Not only will great numbers lose their lives, or be permanently disengaged for severe labor, but an equally great number will permanently be required in the new branches of employment, public and private, which the great changes now going on will establish.

It is inevitable, therefore, that a number, probably not less than two hundred thousand men, will, before this second year of the war ends, be wanted in the United States from European countries. Over populated as those countries are, this movement will be as great a relief to them as to us. How shall it be brought about? By what agencies shall a movement so vast be carried through the difficulties which beset it? It must be remembered that England is essentially hostile to emigration. No movement to bring out skilled or unskilled workmen from the manufacturing districts of any part of England will be favored by the people of the district from which they come, or by the government. In all the manufacturing localities they combine and club against emigration, tubbing a prominent man who may appear.

They will bear almost every degree of suffering there before yielding this point of mingled commercial monopoly and national pride. The man who emigrates weakens their monopoly if he is going to set up the same business in the United States. The fierceness of the opposition shown to such emigration would not be credited by one who had not seen it, or heard explanations of it from sufferers themselves. Such is the state of English emigration, that which next to the German, perhaps, is the most feasible at this time. We want workers in iron, in wool, in silk, miners from Newcastle, and a hundred other especial classes of English labor. Perhaps we shall get a few, but the difficulties of the case are great.

Next our reliance is on Germany and Northern France, and probably this Central European district is the chief of practicable points of supply. The Germans are intelligent, competent, and everywhere valuable. The people of Belgium and Northern France are the same, the only question being in what numbers they can be persuaded to come. We call all these Germans, generally, when speaking of emigrants, and they are all so nearly similar in leading characteristics as to belong under one name at least. There ought to be a large influx already coming from this quarter, as it was the first to become interested in the special inducements sent out by the State Department to consular and diplomatic agents. It would be a measure certain to be well repaid if an energetic and competent agent were immediately sent to go through German Europe and inform the people of the condition of affairs now prevailing in America.

There are also promising fields in which to seek for emigrants among the Swedes and the Norwegians. Several colonies of these people have come out within a few years, settling mainly in Wisconsin and the northwest, with some Swedes also in Pennsylvania. The Norwegians are too gregarious, not diffusing themselves sufficiently, but this is far less the case with the Swedes. These last promise well in every respect and they should be considered among the first.

The whole subject is extremely important at the present time, and a few months hence it may become far more so.

LOCAL NEWS.

WIDE WANTS.

FROM THE ARMY OF POTOMAC.

THE REBELS ASTONISHED AT THE RETROGRADE MOVEMENT.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE Potomac, Fredericksburg, Va., Dec. 17. Yesterday morning, when daylight appeared, the enemy seemed to be, as we do not yet perfectly established, that our army had succeeded in returning to this side of the Rappahannock river.

We returned without losing a single man, or a gun in the retrograde movement. A few soldiers who had struggled off made their appearance on the river bank after the pontoon bridges had been removed, but they were subsequently brought over safely in small boats.

A few privates who were guarding a house inhabited by a pirate family, were not during the night aware of the recrossing of the river, but in the morning became aware of the fact. They safely swam over.

After the General had left the friendly demonstrations of our pickets were renewed and burning and blue uniforms freely mingled. About this time Gen. Franklin displayed a flag of truce, which the enemy immediately recognized, and the exchange of dead bodies was resumed and continued until completed.

RUMORED RECALL OF GEN. MCCLELLAN TO WASHINGTON.

NEGLECT OF SICK SOLDIERS AT JERSEY CITY.—REMOVAL OF GEN. WOOL.

New York, Dec. 17. The Commercial Advertiser states that we were informed by a gentleman whose connection with military matters in this city enables him to be well informed in the changes and movements of officers absent from the army, that Gen. McClellan was called to Washington yesterday, and that he immediately went thither in the evening.

In this connection, we would respectfully suggest, that there were seven fire companies on the ground near the scene of action, but only three of them were put into operation, leaving the others idle. It was apparent from the first that but little could be done by them.

Would it not have been well, instead of keeping all those companies with their machines on the ground, or thereabouts, to have sent a party to their houses, to be ready for any emergency near home? If for instance, a fire had broken out in the South part of the city, would it not have been better had the No. 7 been at home than upon Kay street at the extreme North side? And would not the same question apply to No. 2 on the Point?

Some of our citizens also complain concerning the manner in which the alarm bell upon the City Hall is rung—that it gives forth an uncertain sound. But we would remind our citizens, and all, that, whenever any bell rings between sunset and one hour after sunrise (always excepting the Second Baptist and Congregational bells, and they only at 9 o'clock and sunrise) that such ringing means FIRE. On this account, no one need hesitate but all should act promptly, within these hours.

The Paris Plot to assassinate Napoleon.

Travellers arriving from Paris state that nothing is said of there but the plot, of which our correspondent gave the first public intimation, a few days ago. Foreigners and others anxious to see the Emperor at Compiegne are informed that at present all audiences are suspended. Paris is full of spies, and the wildest rumors are in circulation. A gendarme who was in that capital on Monday writes to us:

"Besides the Boulevard Prince Eugene plot, almost every one you meet inquires: 'Have you not heard of the Emperor being shot down at Compiegne?' A man assured me solemnly on Monday that one of the Cente Gardes was killed at Compiegne by a bullet intended for the Emperor, and that the assassin was fully aprehended."
